A resurse a congram dated London, the 12th instant, announces that the island of Saghalien has been ceded by Japan to Russia. The news is not altogether aurprising. Russia has long been possessed of the Northern halt of Saghalien, and has been scheming Grand Selection... Faust "............ The proximity of Russia has proved a source of uneasiness to the Japanese, who rightly, we think, regard the designs of their big reighbour with suspicion. The Japanese native Press has on several occasions complained of the aggressive and illuminating apparatus will be fixed Dipptric, of dictatorial policy of the CZAR's Government; and expressed the opinion that Russia had no right to interfere with them in Saghalien, and certainly the territory just ceded belongs geographically to Japan. More than that its possession seems to us to be geographi- house will be replaced by a white one, but no mand the case for enquiry. cally necessary to their independence, if not other charge will be made. to their safety. Russia will now be almost within gunshot of the coast of Yesso, and will be able at any time to overawe Japan by a display of force there. The territorial loss sustained by Japan is also by no means inconsiderable, as it exceeds in area the whole of Formose, and in future maps Japan will appear a good deal shorn in dimensions. It is true Saghalien was the least productive portion of the MIKADO's dominions, but it is always humiliating to a power to give up possession of any part of its territory. It is a parallel case to the plunder of Schleswig-Holstein from Denmark by the two great German powers, with this difference—that Japan saw the folly of resistance, while the brave Danes shed their blood freely on the Dannewerke in a vain attempt to preserve the integrity of their fatherland.

Russia is ever busy and ever on the watch Colony in putting him there, that he bad, with in Asia for opportunities to augment her influence or add to her already vast and farreaching dominions. Truly is she called the Colossus of the North. And all along the immense line of her frontier her emissaries are actively engaged—in furthering trade and extending civilisation they say; but also in fomenting disputes, creating jealousies among native chiefs, and swakening hatred against the English, we say. Not long since a telehad rebelled against China, and that they were likely to receive the support of Russia in their struggle with that country. RUSSIAN TEA-DRINKERS. A correspondent of the Pall Mall Gasetta signing himself "Fleur de The," writes on th tea question us follows: - The ten question. as between England and Russia, might with little good will on the part of " tea dealers." " tea mporters,""tea exporters," tea drinkers," and the numerous other correspondents on the subject who have lately rushed into print, be reduced to very narrow limits. Since the open ing of the Russian perts to Uhiness ten (which until within the last fifteen or twenty year was, in the supposed interest of the Siberian trade, admitted to Russia by the overland route alone) the tea cent to Russia has been for the most part identical with that sent to England Formerly it used to be asserted that tea sent across the sea from Ohina to England lost ite flavour; not, at has been sometimes supposed, from the effect of the sen uir. but because, passing twice over the equator. the vessel became heated, and the contents of its hold exposed no matter what precautions might be taken, to the combined influence of mo stare and warmth.
